PS 82 – The Political Theory of Capitalism

Are capitalist societies just or are they full of inequality and exploitation? Do they give people freedom or oppress them in one way or another? Do they encourage virtue or vice, excellence or mediocrity, happiness or misery? Are there other types of society that would be preferable? What might be done to improve capitalist societies? This course will investigate these questions through a study of some of the seminal philosophical arguments for and against capitalism, from its origins to the present day.

Course Format and Requirements:

By far the most important requirement of the course is that you complete all assigned readings carefully and before class. Most reading assignments will be comparatively short (for a weekly seminar), and you should do all of them more than once. Our recommendation is to go over the readings relatively quickly once, trying to pick out the main ideas and to see what topics are covered, and then do them again, slowly and carefully, taking notes about what seems important or intriguing and about what you don't fully understand. These notes will also help immensely in generating useful and stimulating class discussion.

The class will be conducted in seminar format, and you should plan on participating every single day. Attendance is required; absence from more than a third of the classes will automatically result in a failing grade. Students arriving late to class will generally be counted as absent.

The written requirements include a medium-length paper (5-7 double-spaced pages), a longer final paper (12-15 pages), and several short writing exercises that will be incorporated into your participation grade.

The two major papers will be analytical in nature and won't require any research beyond the course readings; guidelines will be handed out several classes in advance of the due date. In both cases, you will submit a first draft of the paper to a writing fellow, who will give you feedback regarding the strengths and weaknesses of your argumentation, organization, clarity, and style, and who will meet with you to discuss your paper. You will then have some time to make revisions, after which you will turn in the final paper (along with the first draft) to us for grading. Because we are using writing fellows in this course, it is especially important that you turn in all drafts of all papers on time; a third of a letter grade will be deducted from the papers for each day they are late.

Grades will be determined as follows:

Medium-length paper	25 %
Final paper	40 %
Class participation	35 %

Note: The requirements listed above presume that everyone does the readings with the care we expect and participates in class discussions. If we get the sense that people aren't doing the readings with sufficient care or if participation starts to lag, we reserve the right to give periodic surprise quizzes, a midterm, and/or a final exam, which could count for up to 25 % of your grade, with the other percentages reduced accordingly. Please do the readings thoroughly and speak up in class so this will not be necessary.
